

Before you use your Harlequin Tap floor

Our Harlequin Tap Floor is a series of 2” slats held together in place by a cloth backing. It rolls up for storage. Because of the spacing between each slat, you may experience a “pinching” especially when rolling the tap floor back up. For this reason, we provide you with two pairs of canvas work gloves, which will protect your fingers from being pinched when the space between the slats goes from the “open” to “closed” position.

How to unroll your tap floor (two people recommended)

After putting on the gloves provided, pull the floor from the open edge (which is the last slat). Grasp the slat with both hands and pull towards you. The floor will begin to unroll with the proper side facing up. Continue to pull until the entire floor is flat. You may have to loosen the roll occasionally.

How to re-roll your tap floor (two people needed)

After putting on the gloves provided and with the floor facing up, one person should begin to tuck the slats under each other to form a roll. The second person should “feed” the floor towards the roll while the first person continues to tuck the slats underneath each other, increasing the size of the roll. Taping the finished roll may be required, but is not always necessary unless you are transporting the roll out of the area. Harlequin offers Velcro® floor straps for this purpose.
